The Maine Attraction

After almost a dozen years as a mom, I'd grown tired of the typical family vacation. I'd had my fill of resort-town motels with noisy game rooms and of kid-friendly restaurants that served mac and cheese, hot dogs, and chicken nuggets. This past summer, I wanted to take my family somewhere different—a place where we could all kick back, have fun, and find more to do than just veg out in front of the hotel-room TV.

I got exactly what I was looking for at Sebasco Harbor Resort, a sprawling 575-acre complex overlooking Casco Bay on the southern coast of Maine. We stayed in a clean and cozy cottage that had lots of room for the kids to play and for my husband and me to have a little privacy.
